Unto the populace of Atlantia, greetings from Alisoun MacCoul of Elphane, Golden Dolphin Herald!

Étaín ingen Maine. Name. The Laurel staff modified the submitted spelling of Étaín inghean Maine because the submitter had requested authenticity and the name as submitted mingled middle Irish and early modern Irish which is registerable but a step from period practice.

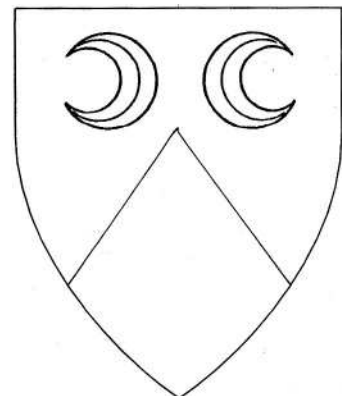

Finnech inghean Labhrainn. Name. The Laurel staff modified the submitted Finnech mac Labhrainn because they felt that the given name could not be documented a masculine name after around 700 and the spelling of the name used to form the patronym dated from the fifteenth century. This meant that by Laurel precedent there was more than three hundred years between the names as documented which is one step from period practice and also that the given name was early Gaelic while the patronymic was Gaelic which was another step from period practice. As two steps from period practice in a name are grounds for return and the Laurel staff could document the given name as a saint's name in a later period, they modified the name to a feminine form in order to register it.
